Catherine A. Maronski's construction law practice focuses on a wide array of complex disputes involving design and construction defects, negligence, breaches of contract, professional malpractice, personal injury, and premises liability. She has represented clients in disputes before state and federal courts, as well as providing claim evaluations and risk management advice. She is skilled in managing all aspects of civil litigation and pre-litigation strategy and is well versed in alternative dispute resolution proceedings. She also helps clients navigate design and construction contract negotiations and interpretations. Most importantly, Catherine consistently provides individualized attention and recommendations to her clients to guide them towards successful outcomes.

Prior to joining Robinson+Cole, Catherine's recent experiences include serving as defense counsel in a six-day jury trial of a multi-million-dollar lawsuit involving counts of defamation, civil conspiracy, and aiding and abetting; and providing pro bono services on behalf of a state correctional facility inmate alleging Eighth Amendment violations against medical providers. She also assisted in the mediation and litigation of a $42 million claim arising out of the demolition of a high-profile public infrastructure project.
