Victoria C. Larson assists a variety of health care providers and health-related businesses, such as health systems, hospitals, physician groups, clinically integrated networks, and long-term care facilities, with a range of health care regulatory and transactional matters, including licensure, corporate practice of medicine requirements, privacy issues, and federal and state health care fraud and abuse compliance, including the Stark Law and Anti-Kickback Statute.

Victoria also advises companies both within and outside of the health care industry in navigating the diverse state, national, and international privacy regulations. She counsels clients on record retention and destruction policies, data use agreements, terms of use and privacy policies, privacy due diligence in corporate transactions, and data breach responses.

Victoria uses her health care regulatory knowledge to work closely with clients to evaluate the additional complexities that accompany health information security. That work entails assisting health care systems, payers, and physician practices with data privacy and security policies, obligations under the federal information blocking rules, notice of privacy practices, and other HIPAA requirements.

While in law school, Victoria interned with the Center for Children's Advocacy, Medical-Legal Partnership Project, where she worked with medical professionals to address legal issues impacting the health care of low-income children. She has experience researching issues related to health disparities, education law, Medicaid, telehealth, and COVID-19 guidance, as well as developing strategies to improve care for low-income children.

Before entering the legal profession, Victoria worked in mental health research at the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs' VA Medical Center in Providence, Rhode Island, coordinating and managing trials at the RR&D Center for Neurorestoration and Neurotechnology. She has experience working with clinicians and investigators to advance healthcare treatments, while ensuring clinical protocols and local guidelines are followed. Victoria uses her life sciences and clinical research background to better understand her clients' needs and challenges.

Victoria holds a Certified Information Privacy Professional/United States (CIPP/US) credential given by the International Association of Privacy Professionals (IAPP).
