Hartford — 860.275.8241

William S. Wilson is a commercial lawyer with more than 25 years of experience representing and counseling public and private owners, developers, design professionals, suppliers, contractors and subcontractors in the areas of construction and commercial law. He is an experienced commercial litigator with a background in civil engineering who also drafts, reviews, and negotiates all types of construction and commercial contracts. Bill is a member of our firm's Construction Law group.

Prior to becoming a lawyer, Bill worked for nine years as a civil engineer in the Connecticut Department of Transportation, where he acquired diverse experience in researching and organizing technical information, analyzing complex design problems, and communicating solutions for the design and construction of small- and large-scale infrastructure improvement projects across Connecticut. Bill's practical, hands-on experience in the construction industry, coupled with his knowledge and breadth of work in construction law, enables him to quickly assess and engage with often-complex construction cases and achieve successful results for his clients. His straight-forward, common sense approach to all disputes leads to cost-effective resolutions.
